SUMMER CAMP

During the summer students lose ground in academics. Arts programs are successful at attracting, engaging and retaining even the toughest kids. These youth, including gang members and previously incarcerated teens are drawn to join arts programs over and over again for the thrill of creative and artistic expression, community recognition for performances, exhibitions or public art works, to learn new job skills and to use the arts to communicate difficult thoughts and emotions.

A structured community summer program is needed to keep children safe, to help them succeed in school, to deter involvement in gang related activity and to discourage delinquent behavior.
